She was all of 28 when she quit her job as a private banker to follow her dreams. And she's doing the world a lot of good already. Meet Yogini Murdeswar, who calls herself a 'healer artist.' Yogini set up her organisation Divya Aakruti in 2004, and has come a long way since then. She uses the powerful medium of colours to express energy, which in turn heals people going through some sort of trouble. Says Yogini, "All my paintings are high energy works. They are made with an intention to give strength. I paint while meditating, and need to be completely void of thoughts and emotions. I try to connect to the universe."

Yogini's paintings are based on the seven basic human chakras. "The chakras get blocked due to pain or emotions. My paintings clear the block and changes the way one thinks. I help clean auras," smiles the young self-taught artist.

Divya Aakruti or Divine Art's motto is 'healing through art.' The paintings focus on humanity as a whole and help to change the way one perceives certain circumstances or reacts in certain situations. "I aim to alter thought and behavioural patterns," says Yogini. According to her, most people buy her paintings thinking that even if they don't transform their lives, they are still paintings, to be used for decor. "But what they don't realise, is that because it's a high energy painting, it will definitely change their life in some way or the other," quips Yogini.
